Once I was in the village on holidays at my relatives' I was enjoying the countryside life: fresh milk, fresh air and dewy grass in the morning. Looking at the blue sky, flowering meadows and endless fields, I realised that it was a shame I wasn't an artist and I couldn't capture the beauty around me. I had camera, but it rescued me and "betrayed" me.

One day in July while I was walking in the meadows, I saw a herd of cows. I greeted the shepherd and started looking for a good view to take a picture. Moving back and clicking the camera, I bumped into a cow. It didn't expect such insolence, put its horns and started mooing. I jumped off, but the cow started closing in on me. The shepherd was laughing. All I could do was run as fast as I could.

I dropped the camera which the shepherd picked up and took several snapshots of me running away. In the evening he came to me for a cup of tea and brought the camera. The photo with me "flying" over the fence was the best, no doubt. Till now it's my favourite shot which reminds me of my unforgettable summer holidays. The shepherd and I were watching the photos together and we laughed a lot.
