Writing.

Have you ever wondered, ~~what is~~ how is life out there, in the wilds. These lands are different from those, city-dwellers are used to live in. People who grew up in ~~the~~ farms or rural areas far from cities understand what freedom means. Although, as a famous saying tells us: "Your rights end where other persons' freedom begins".

I grew up in my Grandfather's house. The nearest town was more than a hundred kilometers away and, indeed, laws are different here. Although, there were mostly farms, there were ^{also} a couple of orchards and gardens with fresh fruit hanging in the trees, waiting to be picked and eaten. But of course, someone had to look after those trees and bushes and they don't like, when results of their hard work are being stolen by some pesky teenagers, but since there wasn't much for us to do, that was one way to ~~entertain~~ entertain ourselves. The thrill of being ~~can~~ caught, and ~~fresh~~ is contrasting with fresh and juicy reward. But sometimes, when you are not fast enough, punishment may commence, in a form of stone salt shot right at your back. Ouch! Not lethal of course, but leaves a mark or two.

Usually, my friends and I gathered ~~at~~ ~~not~~ not far from such farm, before going to the river nearby to freshen our bodies in cold waters. We quickly talk ourselves through a plan, which is almost every time: "quick in, quick out". Then we wake up more: running and ~~climbing~~ ~~over~~ over fences picking up everything we can and jumping over the fence on the other side. Lucky, if not caught, we casually stroll to the river with our rewards. The day has only begun, but we still have much more to do, and many more gardens to visit...
