It was a nice shiny morning in the countryside. When I got up it seemed to be another ordinary day. But when I was having breakfast somebody suddenly knocked at the door. I was surprised because I didn't expect any guests then.

When I opened the door, there was a man I once met in the town.

"Oh, Tom" - he said. "I'm so happy that it is you." My car has broken and it seems to be nobody else in 5 km there. "Could you help me?" - he asked.

Being kind from my childhood I ~~was~~ eagerly agreed. I took useful tools and went to the place of the accident. When I was walking nearly for an hour at along the road trying to find the man's car I suddenly realised that I left the man, whom I didn't know well, in my house.

How unreasonable it was! The thought frightened me so much that I dropped my tools and immediately deserted my way back home. I ran rapidly across the field, jumped over the fence. I was out of breath when I reached my house.

When I came into I found the rooms absolutely empty. There was even no furniture. This accident ~~story~~ taught me to be more sensible.
