My Career Start

Have you dreamed of becoming a pilot or a fireman when you were a small child? I bet you ~~do~~ <sup>have</sup>. Everyone hopes to do some risky job when they ~~are~~ are young. I wasn't an exception, either. As a small boy, I wanted to be a stunt man.

My brother Dan was ten years older than me and was engaged in breakdancing. I was only five and strongly believed he was particularly the one who could teach me all the dangerous tricks a skilled stunt man should know. "Let's get started, Dan," I begged one Sunday morning. It was summer, and we were living in our country house. "Are you ready?" my brother inquired, obviously unsure what to start with. We were walking in the fields when an idea occurred to me. "Danny, can you jump over that fence?" "Surely," my brother answered, and he did. I was very small, and it seemed impossible to me. Dan gave me some kind of a lecture, and I tried over and over, but failed.

Suddenly, we heard a strange noise. There came two huge wild dogs, barking loudly. "They're going to bite," I thought. I can't describe how scared I was. Without hesitation, I jumped over the fence. Dan followed me. We ran across the fields until we saw that the dogs were far behind. "You're going to be a perfect stunt man, Nick," my brother said cheerfully. I was upset. "I'd rather not," I muttered. "I'm nothing but a coward." Anyway, I didn't give up. I am a stunt man now.
