It was the end of May. The school days were coming to a close, every student anticipated the ~~the~~ start of <sup>the</sup> summer holidays. ~~the~~ However, the summertime wasn't completely free and careless, as each year the children were given tasks to accomplish during the three months. This year Jack and I were assigned the task of creating a photoalbum that ~~included~~ we would show to our class. It had to be sort of a report on how we spent our holidays. So we thought we should make it as interesting as possible. No boring photos on the beach or graceful pictures of the sunset. It had to be something dangerous that would capture the attention of our classmates. That was what we did. Both Jack and I ~~know~~ do parkour, a ~~form of an~~ an extreme sport, so we incorporated that into the album. When we were halfway through the process of making the project, Jack realised that ~~that was~~ the photos were all taken in the city, which seemed a bit dull. To fix that, we went to the countryside to take try and create something interesting. There we came across a field that was surrounded by a fence. Jack asked me to ~~take~~ take a map as he was jumping over the wooden fence. That's what I did, but as soon as Jack landed on his feet, a dog came out of a bush and started chasing him. ~~Running~~ While Jack was running and screaming for his life, I was rolling on the ground in laughter. ~~As~~ I feel kind of bad now, but he made it out ok. It was a hell of a summer. ~~the~~
