It was July 4th when it all happened. On that day Brandon, 18-year-old university student and worker at one of the Colorado firework shops had plans on taking a day-off and spending a day of Independence together with his family. But life had ~~already~~ prepared a series of surprises for him.

At 7 am Brandon's boss called and asked to work extra hours in order to sell more on the occasion of ~~the~~ celebration. Half an hour later Brandon was driving state highway. And here's where all the fun stuff came to his life.

Suddenly, he realised that in a minute or two he will run out of gasoline. In the middle of nowhere, between fields of corn and rye, he decides to leave his car there and get to the store before opening by feet.

When he was 6, his father always took him hiking, so Brandon knew perfectly how to get to the city having to cut so much distance.

But remember, it's mid-summer, sun is shining, all kinds of insects are flying everywhere. At some point Brandon realises that there're thousands of bees and grasshoppers trying to chase him.

Interestingly, this teenager had never tried running before, but that day he probably set the new world record in track having to jump over all the warden fences

Nevertheless, he was late to work. And here comes the worst part - his boss fired him. Five years later, here he comes, world running champion and ~~the~~ the Olympics winner. That life-changing set of events ^{led} that drove him to success.
