Jeremy Reed was an ordinary teenager living in a small impoverished town in Texas. It seemed that he'd follow in his father's footsteps, who was a hereditary car mechanic and owned a small auto repair station on the outskirts of the town. However, when Jeremy was given a box of paints on his fifteenth birthday by his childhood love Chloe – a pretty blonde with sky-blue eyes – he made up his mind to take up painting. Surprisingly enough, he revealed himself as a very talented painter and soon dared to exhibit his numerous portraits of Chloe in the local art gallery.

It turned out that his works attracted the attention of a well-known art critic, who offered him a scholarship for New York Art School. Jeremy was very excited with ~~those~~ ^{the} news and ran home to ~~tell~~ ^{share} it with his parents. If his mother's reaction was rather indifferent, his father got furious and offered him a choice of either becoming a mechanic or immediately leaving the house. Jeremy was so crest-fallen with those words, that he rushed upstairs into his room, took all his savings and ran out of home. He kept running, crossing the fences of farm fields, hoping there was enough money in his pocket to buy a train ticket. And every time he jumped over a fence, he got more determined that he'd cross any barriers on the way to his dream of becoming a painter.
