"It's too early to be here, isn't it?" - Lily asked herself looking around. Lily Brown was an amateur photographer with a passion for extraordinary things. Every day she woke up before sunrise just to roam the familiar farm that used to belong to her uncle. It seemed to be the right place for taking unusual pictures of anything that could catch her eye. And today was no exception. The field was silent, as usual, until Lily heard a suspicious noise. She tried to convince herself that it was her uncle's dog and nothing bad could happen. Lily hid under the old oak tree and waited for the sun to rise. The noises didn't stop. And for some reason, Lily felt drawn to the farm. She couldn't leave, not knowing where the sounds were coming from. She ran to the centre of the farm, expecting to see a car or a cow, but what she saw came as a surprise. A boy, probably the same age as her, was trapped in a net her uncle used to go fishing with. He didn't make a sound when Lily ripped the fragile trap with her bare hands. He stood up and ran away, jumping over the fence. "A thank you wouldn't be enough!" - she screamed at him. He didn't turn around. Lily had nothing else to do so she took a picture of him jumping over that fence, secretly hoping that one day she'd be able to figure out who the mysterious boy was.
