John was running through the field with a happy smile on his face. "I'm finally free!" - that was his only thought. Those awful days full of preparations to the exams were gone, he had entered the university and now he was in two minds: if he wanted to go swimming in the nearest river or to visit his old friend he hadn't talked to for months. "David will be very glad to have a chat with me for sure" - thought John and rushed through the huge field to a tiny house where he had spent some wonderful days. He was so excited to see David that he didn't notice at first glance that the house was empty. Not only ~~the~~ were the lights switched off but also ~~the~~ all the windows and doors were closed. John was walking around the house trying to understand where his friend is and why this wonderful day was becoming a nightmare. Unfortunately, he didn't get the answers and had to leave the house being extremely worried and scared. He felt as if something had happened to the family of David. John walked slowly through the field which seemed so lovely just a few minutes ago. "John! John! I've been looking for you for the whole morning!" - he heard: David was running to John with the happiest smile John had ever seen. "We are leaving the house for two weeks! I wanted to see you before the departure, but your parents told me that you had left for a walk. Finally you are here!"

And the worst day became the best.
