The Big Test.

A couple of weeks ago we were alarmed to learn that a physics test was coming. I was terrified: physics is not my strong suit, but I kept calm and confident. You can't say that about my classmates, though.

Through our social network, I saw my classmates talking about how to ~~not~~ be at school during the test. Some wanted to simulate illness, some proposed playing truant for this day. "What is that rubbish?" - I asked to myself. Really, did they think they can dodge the inevitable? It's going to cost them an arm and a leg. That was my thought about my classmates' behavior.

I prepared for the test, not writing any cheat sheets. You obviously can't use them on a test!

Then, the day came. We got into the classroom and each began a brainstorm. While some of my classmates tried to distract me and asked for help while the teacher was out, I remained silent. Many people would shake my point of view. No one wants to end up being a dunce or getting a detention!

When the test ended, we handed in the works and shared our feelings about the test. Many were nervous, but I told them: "Don't fret, everything will go smoothly." At the same time, I was a little anxious as well. But I thought that it was just a normal test, nothing else, I was prepared for that. And I came home and began waiting for the results.

AND on the following week they came. I was nervous at first, but when I looked at the charts, I thought: "Terrific! 80 per cent is a really good result. I wasn't expecting such good results." My classmates who flunked the test were warned by our teacher that if they flunked the test again, they would be excluded. I thought: "March!" But it's the rules: you study or you leave, and I don't want the latter happening.

In the end, I remained victorious and in high spirits. I thought: "Preparation beforehand is a good thing, I think I should do that again." AND that's how I got good marks in physics. Even though it wasn't my cup of tea.
