The Facts differ.

One December day when everybody was hustling for Christmas presents our class was preparing for a Final test. We had little time to prepare and naturally worried about it.

Ann and Mary wanted to revise the material together. They wrote the cheat sheets to be on the safe side. In the morning, the girls met at school. Mary said to Ann: "Ann, have you brought the cheat sheets?" Ann nervously looked into her bag and understood that she forgot them. At first, Mary heard, the boys wanted to play truant and she decided to do it too, but Ann persuaded her ~~not~~ to take the challenge. Then pupils visited the classroom. Hardly had Ann looked at the tasks, she thought that she was a dunce but then she started to do it.

Suddenly, somebody ~~was~~ rustled at the back of the classroom. Bill was looking at his cheat sheets. "What's the problem?" - the teacher ~~roared~~ roared. She came up to Bill and said to give her his answers. Bill protested. The teacher took Bill's test and said that he failed it, he would get an detention next day after lessons. The boy angrily took his things and went out.

In the evening, the classmates discerned the situation with Bill and thought about the terrific idea how to help him. Fortunately, Bill ~~rewrote~~ successfully the test. So, there were two tests in this story - a test and a life-test.
