I was walking down the hall in search of a new Freshman that ~~principal~~<sup>headmaster</sup> had told me about. He asked me to show my new classmate around the school and explain how our school system works. The headmaster apologized that he had to bother me but he couldn't do it himself as he was extremely busy. He also asked me to be as polite and chatty as it was possible because this new kid seemed to be a little shy.

When I spotted someone who matched headmaster's description - red hair, glasses, neatly dressed - I got up to him and quickly introduced myself. I was in a hurry as I hadn't had lunch earlier so I decided to briefly talk to him and then have a quick snack. Unfortunately, because I was in a rush I didn't really bother to ask his name.

I offered to walk him to his next class which was in the second floor. I rushed to the stairs but my new classmate didn't even moved from where he was standing. He was staring at me for about two minutes and I thought he must be really shy just like the headmaster<sup>had</sup> told. However, after this long pause he followed me up the stairs.

, let me tell you more about school rules. If you play truant in class you'll get a detention. If the teacher catches you with the cheat sheet on the exam it'll have much more terrific consequences, though. As we were approaching our classroom I spotted headmaster heading towards us. However, he was not alone. ~~There~~ A boy<sup>was</sup> with a red hair and glasses, almost identical to my new classmate, was walking ~~by~~ by headmaster's right side.

, I see you have met your new math teacher already. I was just going to find you and tell you that I've found time to show your new classmate around the school. Thus, you're free to go. By the way, your math teacher and your new classmate are brothers. They look really alike, don't they?
