It was a hot, sunny day. Me and my friend, Simon, were slowly going to our school. Going ~~through~~ along the first floor we met our classmates:

- What are you doing here so early? - I asked them.

- Did you forget? Today is our English teacher's birthday! - answered Kim, one of my friends.

- What?! It's terrific! Nevertheless, it's really good. But I have totally forgotten about it! Do you have presents? - ~~she~~ they showed me a lot of her favourite chocolate bars and flowers, which they had bought the day before. I thought it was gonna to be the worst day of my school life because I ~~was~~ also had forgotten about a quiz.

- That's all right! I think I don't need anymore my cheat papers. We are going to have a party! - I had already accustomed to Simon's optimism. After this little dialog our ~~big~~^{small} group went upstairs to make a surprise and hide in the dark.

Ten minutes past, The bell rang.

- Well, maybe she is late? Or doesn't have the first lesson in her schedule? Let's go to PE lesson instead.

But five minutes later we were informed about our teacher's illness.

- Should we make a visit to her flat? - asked Simon.

- It's ~~going to~~^{going to} be the best surprise ~~we~~^{you} have ever made! - answered our teacher, who is still the best comedian in our school.
