To let my reader know, I am a 17-year-old teenager going to graduate from school in a few months. As a normal person of this age, I have friends. I really want to tell a funny story of our school life. At least, we thought it would be so. Our Physics teacher is an aged man that has a pretty strange character, and pupils always joke about it. Once, as he told that the next class will include a test, we decided to write many cheat sheets and tell all the classmates to do the same. This idea seemed really dunce to some of them. A few days later the expected test began. All of us started using the cheat sheets and we didn't even try to hide them and play truant.

We felt astonished, the effect was terrific. Our teacher saw many of us cheating, but it was totally out of his control, we laughed loudly and he left the class. Then we realised that the idea was probably not as good as we thought. Soon I and my closest friend were called to the headteacher's room. "How bad can you be to joke about an aged teacher?" - he asked. We were already thinking about the detention, but suddenly our physics teacher came in. He said: "Don't punish them, I understand everything", - and the headteacher trusted him. After that we began to respect the teacher and study his subject really hard.
