THE EXCHANGE

The school that twins Jane and Jill go to is the most common school you could ever find. There are children that study rather bad as well as ones, whose attitude to the process is quite serious.

The two girls were so alike in their appearance but so different in their ^{interests} ~~character~~! Once there was an accident that proved it right.

“Jane”, Jill said, “you know, I have a maths test tomorrow and I don't feel I can pass it. Could you stand up for me?” “Well”, Jane answered, “I indeed am better in Maths than you are but I don't want my teacher to think I'm playing truant, so you then ~~must~~ go to my English lesson while I will be at your Maths! So, the deal was sealed.

Jill, full of enthusiasm, set off for the English class, looking forward to a great mark and hoping ~~no one~~ no one would notice it wasn't her taking the test. Jane, ~~wasn't~~ ^{though} wasn't so careless. She was afraid that the tasks could be too difficult. That's why she'd prepared a cheat sheet but hoped she wouldn't need it because, otherwise, Jill would get a detention by her sister's fault and Jane didn't want to upset her parents and feel guilty.

On her arrival to the Maths ~~class~~ ^{room} door Jane saw Jill's classmates having fun and not, revising for the test at all! She was very surprised ~~at~~ ^{by} their behaviour. When the bell rang Jane and the ~~class~~ children went into the classroom and were told that the test was cancelled. The students said they'd already been told that by another teacher just before Jane approached the room. Jane felt excited at how terrific it was that nobody recognised her and that she didn't have to stress out completing exercises! However, Jill, sitting in the opposite wing of the building, didn't share the same emotion. She was just announced that she had to write an essay on a poem she had never read!
