This story took place a year ago during summer holidays. My friends and I have decided to go camping. None of us has done something like that before so we were excited to test ourselves. "This is going to be terrific!" - my friend Ann exclaimed when we were packing our clothes together. Well, let's just say that that was the last time she felt happy about this trip.

When we arrived to the place where we planned to start our journey, everyone seemed to be happy but no one was concerned about our lack of surviving skills, although, all of us should have been more prudent. Not ~~bothering~~ bothering about taking maches or other special equipment, we took junk food and board games. Moreover, we had never worked out before, so it was hard to go deep into the forest since everyone got tired after an hour of walking. Of course, we didn't have a map or even a compass. Eventually, we got lost. Someone tried to cheer up the others and said: "At least we weren't attacked by bears." His joke didn't help though. We felt even more depressed when it started raining heavily.

After all, the more you fail, the more you learn. You should always prepare your body and the content of your bag for camping properly. Otherwise, something may go wrong. Luckily, we got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
