Danger: Stray Dogs!

As soon as I and my sister grew up enough to realise what we were doing, our mother began to tell us to be keen with ~~the~~ ~~the~~ ~~the~~ keeping ourselves safe. "Never come close to stray dogs," she often said to us, but we did not pay attention to her words. This led to an accident. I'm nervous about even now when I ~~the~~ think about it.

It was a frosty yet sunny day, and I and my sister decided to go for a walk. We quickly dressed up and started exploring our neighborhood that looked completely unfamiliar with snow covering its streets. We were relaxed and ~~the~~ absolutely not ready for what happened next.

"Hey!" my sister suddenly exclaimed. "Look there!"

"Hmm... What's that?" I mumbled as I turned my head to see where she was pointing.

There was a ~~the~~ dog with a cute muzzle and curly yellow fur. "Isn't ~~it~~ adorable?" my sister said as she made a few steps towards the dog. "Wendy," I replied, "are you sure it's a good idea to touch it?"

"Oh, come on," she replied. "Don't be so boring." She reached out for the dog. ~~It~~ It definitely did not like her action as it began to roar. Wendy was a little surprised, but did not give up. She placed her hand on the dog's forehead and petted it. Then something terrific happened. The dog jumped at my sister and, still roaring, squeezed her arm with its teeth. Wendy screamed and jumped back, shocked and scared.

The dog seemed to be ready for another attack. I hugged my sister in an attempt to protect her, working out a plan of escaping in my head. We prepared for the worst.

"Hey!" a rude voice said.

We looked around to see a man standing behind us. He approached and rose his hand as if he wanted to hit the dog. It immediately stopped roaring and ran away, scared.

"Oh. Thank you!" we said in a chorus and got away from that place as fast as possible.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
