Once me and two of my friends, Fred and George, decided to visit a ghost house. If you don't know, a ghost house is a building left by its owners many years ago. Usually it's a very scary place! Many people believe that a spirit still lives there.

So, we wanted to go there and show each other how strong and brave we were. We really thought that it was a terrific idea and even worked out a plan. George made an offer: "Let's go there at night. It's the only chance to see the ghost because it's afraid of daylight." We agreed and the next night we were standing in front of this house but we were too frightened to open the door. We stood there for a very long time but we could see only this scary and strange building with broken windows on the first floor. It seemed to be empty. Half an hour later I felt tired and whispered: "Let's go home. There are no ghosts here!" But at that very moment we all saw a pale ugly face of an old man in a window of the third floor. He was looking at us and smiling. I reeled but still managed to exclaim: "Run!" A few seconds later we were scuttling away from that uncanny place. To make things worse, it was heavily raining.

We got back home in one piece; cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson: never try to visit ghost houses!
