Our Life Lesson

"Your classmate Annie's such a terrific student," my mom said.
"She works hard and has a lot of achievements."

My brother and I felt jealous and replied, "Maybe she's just lucky, and everything works out for her." The conversation ended at that.

Mom's words got stuck in my head, and I couldn't help but wonder if Annie was really better than me or my brother. I asked him, "Do you think Annie is much more intelligent than us?"

"I have no idea. But I know how we can see if it's true." He proposed to approach Annie's house ~~and~~, overhear the conversations she would have,
and see what she would be doing.

So we came up to the girl's house later that day and started to eavesdrop. Well, it was a <sup>rather</sup> strenuous task given that we were only equipped with a reel piece of paper. Suddenly, we heard the least expected words... and the most wise words.

"John and Zac are so successful, and you should start being active as well," her mom told her. "I'm not saying you are worse than them. You can't compare people, but you're supposed to learn from them."

Only then did we realize that people are never ignorant or uncanny or worse than others. We felt relieved and somewhat happy, but the night was bitterly cold. We got back in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt and scuttling
an important lesson.
