A DOWNPOUR IN LONDON

When I first came to London as a summer school student I had no idea about how it will be for me and whether I will like it or not. Of course, I was really excited about it but I ~~have~~ could not have known that it would turn out into such a terrific and stunning experience. Now I see the world in a different way.

I will never forget the words of Rachel which she said to me when we first met: "Do you love working out?" she asked me. A weird way to make friends, isn't it? Although it was scuttling and uncanny of her to ~~question~~ behave this way, we just hit it off. I replied to her that I loved working out and she said that we could go to gym together after our English classes in the morning.

As we all know, London is huge and we didn't really know ~~how~~ where the gym was located. We were extremely passionate about the idea of exploring something by ourselves and didn't really want to ask for any help.

We went out of the dormitory and in four hours we found ourselves in Hyde Park having no understanding of how to get to the gym, which we wanted to get to. That wasn't even the worst thing about it. The worst thing about it ~~was~~ that it started to rain. We were frustrated and reel. The rain was enhancing and soon became a downpour. We were completely wet out of the sudden. "Never again," Rachel said.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
