Many of my peers think that it is really fun to do camping every once in a while. I personally find the idea terrific, but it doesn't hurt to do it at least once, does it?

And so, one day my friend Michael called me and said: "Hey, man, let's go ~~in a forest~~^{camping} for a week! I bet you'll enjoy it!" Back then, he got me absolutely hooked, so I started packing up. A tent, mug, tooth brush, almost everything went into my bag. I really hoped that the thing would somehow work out in the end.

Our group consisted of four people: me, Michael, Ann and Michelle. "What a nice place! Let's make our camp right here!" said Michael when we came out on an open hill, and just then I realised that it was Michael's plan to hit on Ann, seeing that he clearly had a crush on her. We agreed, since the place was actually really nice.

Some time later we heard some kind of uncanny noise in the bushes behind us. As we approached it, the noise became louder and louder, and we were surprised to see what was in there. Turns out, it was a small teddy bear! ~~The girls started saying that it was very cute when I realised that there was some kind of natural dread building up inside me. I slowly approached everyone and told them in a shaking voice that his mother is bound to be somewhere close.~~

I realised one simple thing: his mother was near. When I told this to everyone, they got scared like never before. There was only one option: grab our stuff and run. Also, ironically, it started raining all of a sudden.

And so we ran out of the forest. Fortunately, we got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson: never let Michael choose a camping spot.
