It was a day like any other. At least I thought it was. I got up and rushed to the kitchen, anticipating a ~~free~~ delicious breakfast.

"Why did not you make breakfast for me?" I shouted to my mom.

"Because you are already running late," she said, rolling her eyes.

And then I realised that I had a contest held by an English-language club. I quickly dressed up and called my friend, Kate who had to participate with me. It turned out she had overslept, too. We needed to work the problem out immediately. We decided to take a bus to get to the contest in time.

"Do you think we can make it?" Not much time left, I asked Kate, feeling upset.

She seemed to be unworried, too. She <sup>just</sup> shrugged her shoulders.

Luckily, we were just several minutes late. But then the worst thing happened. To punish us for being late, teachers made us participate outdoors. And then out of the blue it started to rain heavily. What a terrific mess of unpleasant situations!

In just a few minutes we got cold. Surely, me and Kate both felt down and guilty. After completing the tasks we hurried home.

"We shouldn't have stayed up late yesterday,"

now I admit it. We would not have overslept and been punished. I have no positive emotions from the contest now, I said with a sigh.
We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched,
but having learnt an important lesson.
