Sophie and David were spending their holiday camping in Norway. They were attracted by picturesque landscapes and unique culture of that northern country.

One day they woke up as usual, breathed that fresh crisp air and set off for a walk. It seemed to be a perfect sunny day for exploring nature and heading for a lake. Suddenly some nasty clouds appeared on the sky and it started pouring cats and dogs. Despite being aware of how terrific their situation was, Sophie and David managed to stay calm ~~and~~ to find a solution.

They actually felt how miserable the human being was comparing to the power of nature, in spite of all technological and scientific progress. They were silent, both constantly thinking trying to invent a solution. To make matter worse, it was too far to reach the nearest village.

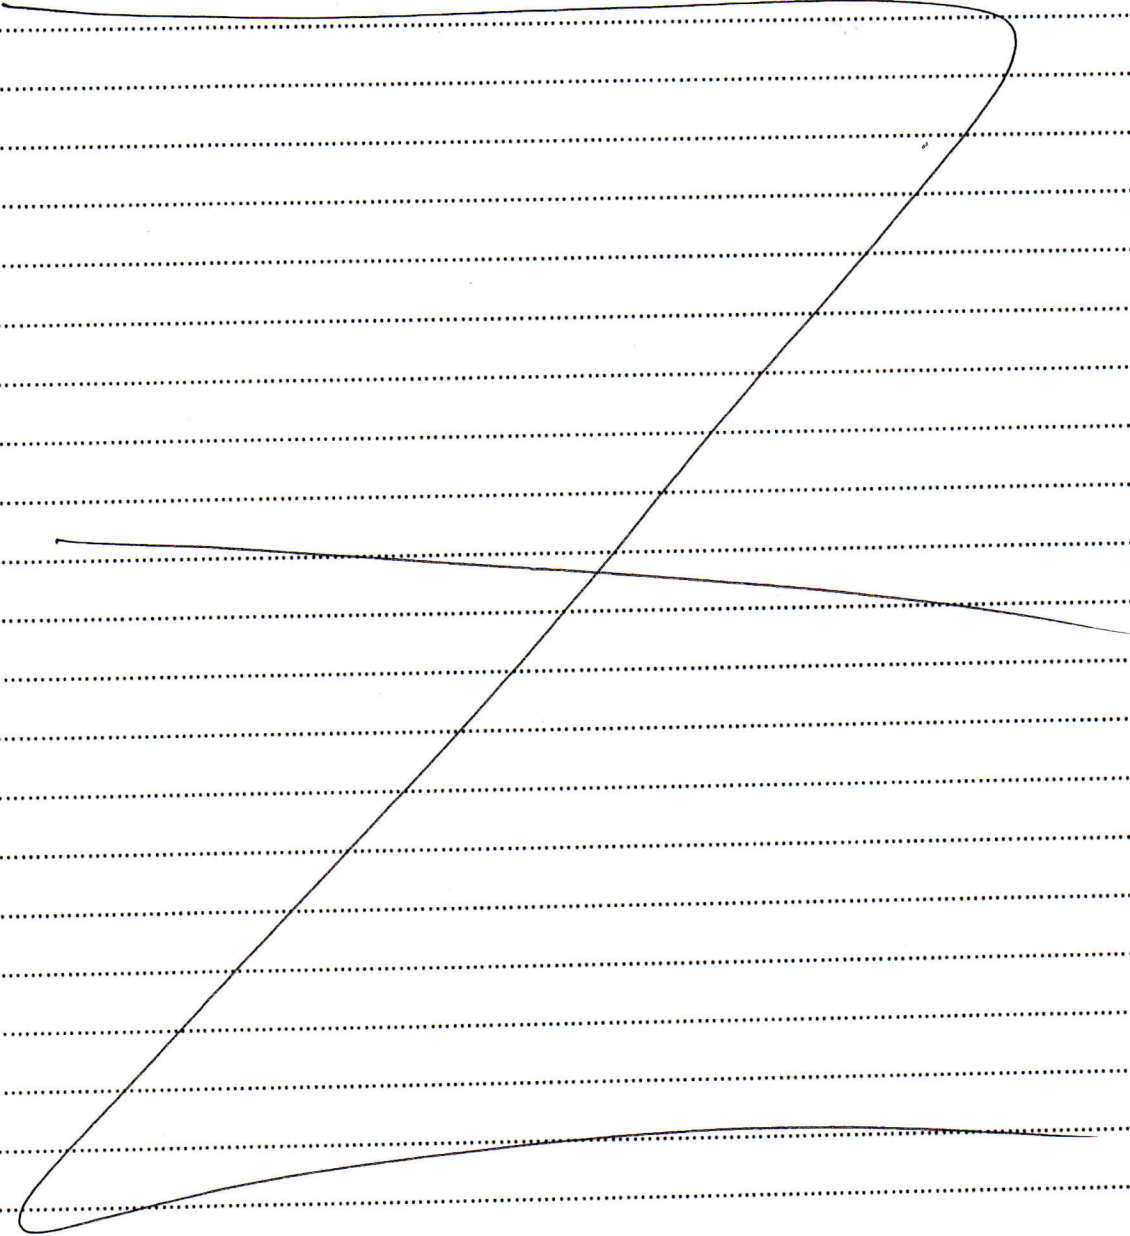

Sophie suggested communicating to a rescue team but it didn't work out as, due to thunderstorm, there was no mobile connection. Feeling desperated, David quitted thinking of a solution and said, "It must be a challenge for us to get home safe and sound but I personally find it the most precious experience of our journey." "I definitely agree", replied Sophie. "It have awaken my mind and spirit, (have) helped to shed fear of getting lost. In fact, it is an opportunity of personal growth."

While they were discussing philosophically, the sky cleared and mother nature led them go to their camp. There David said, "We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson."
