The day we went fishing with my little brother and dad was sunny and warm. It was the last week of February and we decided to keep our promise of having a day out together, and go fishing in winter. That was our last chance to do so, as the ice would have melted two days after and it would have been too dangerous to even step on it. "I believe, no, I'm sure you'll like it!" said my dad in a cheerful manner. If someone told us what would happen on that uncanny day, we wouldn't believe it.

It was a terrific experience. Everything went on fine for us until at some point my brother said that he heard a cracking sound coming from right under his feet. "We should get out of here" I said just as my words were muted by a horrific splash. Next thing I know, I'm trying to reel my brother's hand out with a stick. I felt hopeless and terrified, my hands were shaking but I knew that I'd do anything for my little brother. After my plan with a stick didn't work out, my dad finally came to help me. He was trying to find a stick long and thick enough to reel my brother out and his plan succeeded. He helped my brother to the edge of the crack and then out of water.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
