Spring is, perhaps, the most anticipated time of the year. A time when nature awakens after the long winter slumber. You can easily feel the spirit of the spring in the air. And we felt it, too, quite literally.

In the early days of March me and my friends decided to finally work out outdoors, being exhausted from dull winter routine. Turned out, lots of other teenagers had the same uncanny idea in their minds: all sports ground had been already occupied. Obviously, we felt upset, even sorrowful, at the news. But my always-anxious-for-an-adventure best friend came up with an uncanny idea. 'Let's go to the lake, guys! We can skate there have all by ourselves', he announced.

Everyone but me seemed excited. 'Sound scuttling to me', I tried to argue. Still my rash peers persuaded me to go. If only I knew what was about to happen...

Long story short, we swiftly got there. At first, everything was going smoothly, until we all got crumbled in one spot with seemingly thin ice. Then the most terrific thing possible took place: the ice gave way under our combined weight. Half of us fell in the freezing water, the others scattered around. In addition to shock and fear I felt rage building up. 'I told you it was a bad idea, why do you never listen?!', I hissed, needing to give my fellas a helping hand. F

Fortunately, we all quickly got to the shore, panting heavily, and agreed that yes, mistakes had been made. We got home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
