One day I was invited to enter a contest held by my English-language club at school. I immediately made my decision and agreed as I thought it would be a great experience for me. In fact, I was happy about it and had lots of hopes. The aim of this event was to provide national traditions of Anglo-Saxons and to check our awareness of them.

When I came to school, I took my place on the opening ceremony. There were huge drums that made a terrific sound when I first heard it I needed to fear. However, the music itself was quite pleasant and encouraging. After several competitions our teacher told us that "In order to work out special skills we ^{must} ~~had~~ to go hiking in the evening with sleep." It was a real surprise. I imagined myself in the wild without cell phone, Internet, dirty, uncanny, but to my regret, I could do nothing with it.

Five hours later I found myself sitting in a tent with my classmates. I can't say that we weren't having a good time. We were, up to the moment when a huge bear appeared. I felt panic. My brain thought of us scuttling in different directions in fear. Suddenly, our teacher told us: "Keep silent and sit quiet!" The bear calmly walked near our tent. We all felt relief.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson: never run from bear.
