This story happened to me when I was little, around 9 or 10 years old. Me and my brother Danny loved to play together. We would always imagine some uneasy scenario and play without stopping. Our favorite game was about pirates. The idea came to us probably because we lived on a sea shore and our dad had a boat. He would constantly take us fishing and by the age of 8 I could <sup>steer</sup> ~~operate~~ it well. Once, ~~then~~ me and my brother decided it would be a terrific idea to use our dad's boat. We pushed it into the the water and went further and further from home when we ~~can~~ could hardly see the shore we stopped. My brother pulled out a sword and proclaimed: "Prepare to die, Black Bearded". I stood up immediately. "Not so fast" - I said with a grin. We started our battle and while we tried to make each other walk the plank a storm came. The sky turned grey and the wind started blowing harder. When the rain ~~so~~ started we decided to head back home but the waves were too strong. Steering the ship was a work out a baby couldn't handle. Then Danny fell out. I got very scared but jumped in the water to try and save him. I don't remember much after that. I ~~remember~~ remember scuttling waves and our dad dragging us to the shore. He was very mad but as we were walking home, he didn't shout at us. He just told us how much he loved us. We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched but having learnt an important lesson.
