That summer, my friend Amy and I were staying at a summer camp. Every day <sup>there</sup> started with working out in the yard. The other part of the day comprised games, classes and field trips. Sounds like a terrific holiday, doesn't it? However it wasn't.

The rooms we lived in were horrible, the water running in the bathrooms was always cold and the meals were so attractive that you wanted to vomit the moment you saw them. Honestly, we were terrified by these conditions, so I made up a plan.

- Amy, don't you think we should escape from this place?

My friend hated the camp so much that she immediately agreed.

- Of course we should!

We dedicated two days for preparation, patiently waiting for the next field trip to come.

When we finally went to an open air class, we silently left the group and continued to go by ourselves according to google maps.

The camp was actually located not far from a small town, from each we could easily catch a train to Moscow.

When we eventually started seeing the houses of the town we realized we had been trapped: there was a wide river flowing right in front of us. However, there was no way back, so we ~~had~~ had to cross the water badly.

When we got out of water on the other bank of the river we were trembling from cold and fear.

We already reached the railway station when we ~~found~~ found out we had lost our money for the tickets, so we had to call our moms. Amy's mom didn't say anything. She was just shocked.

She picked us up in an hour, wet and stressed out.

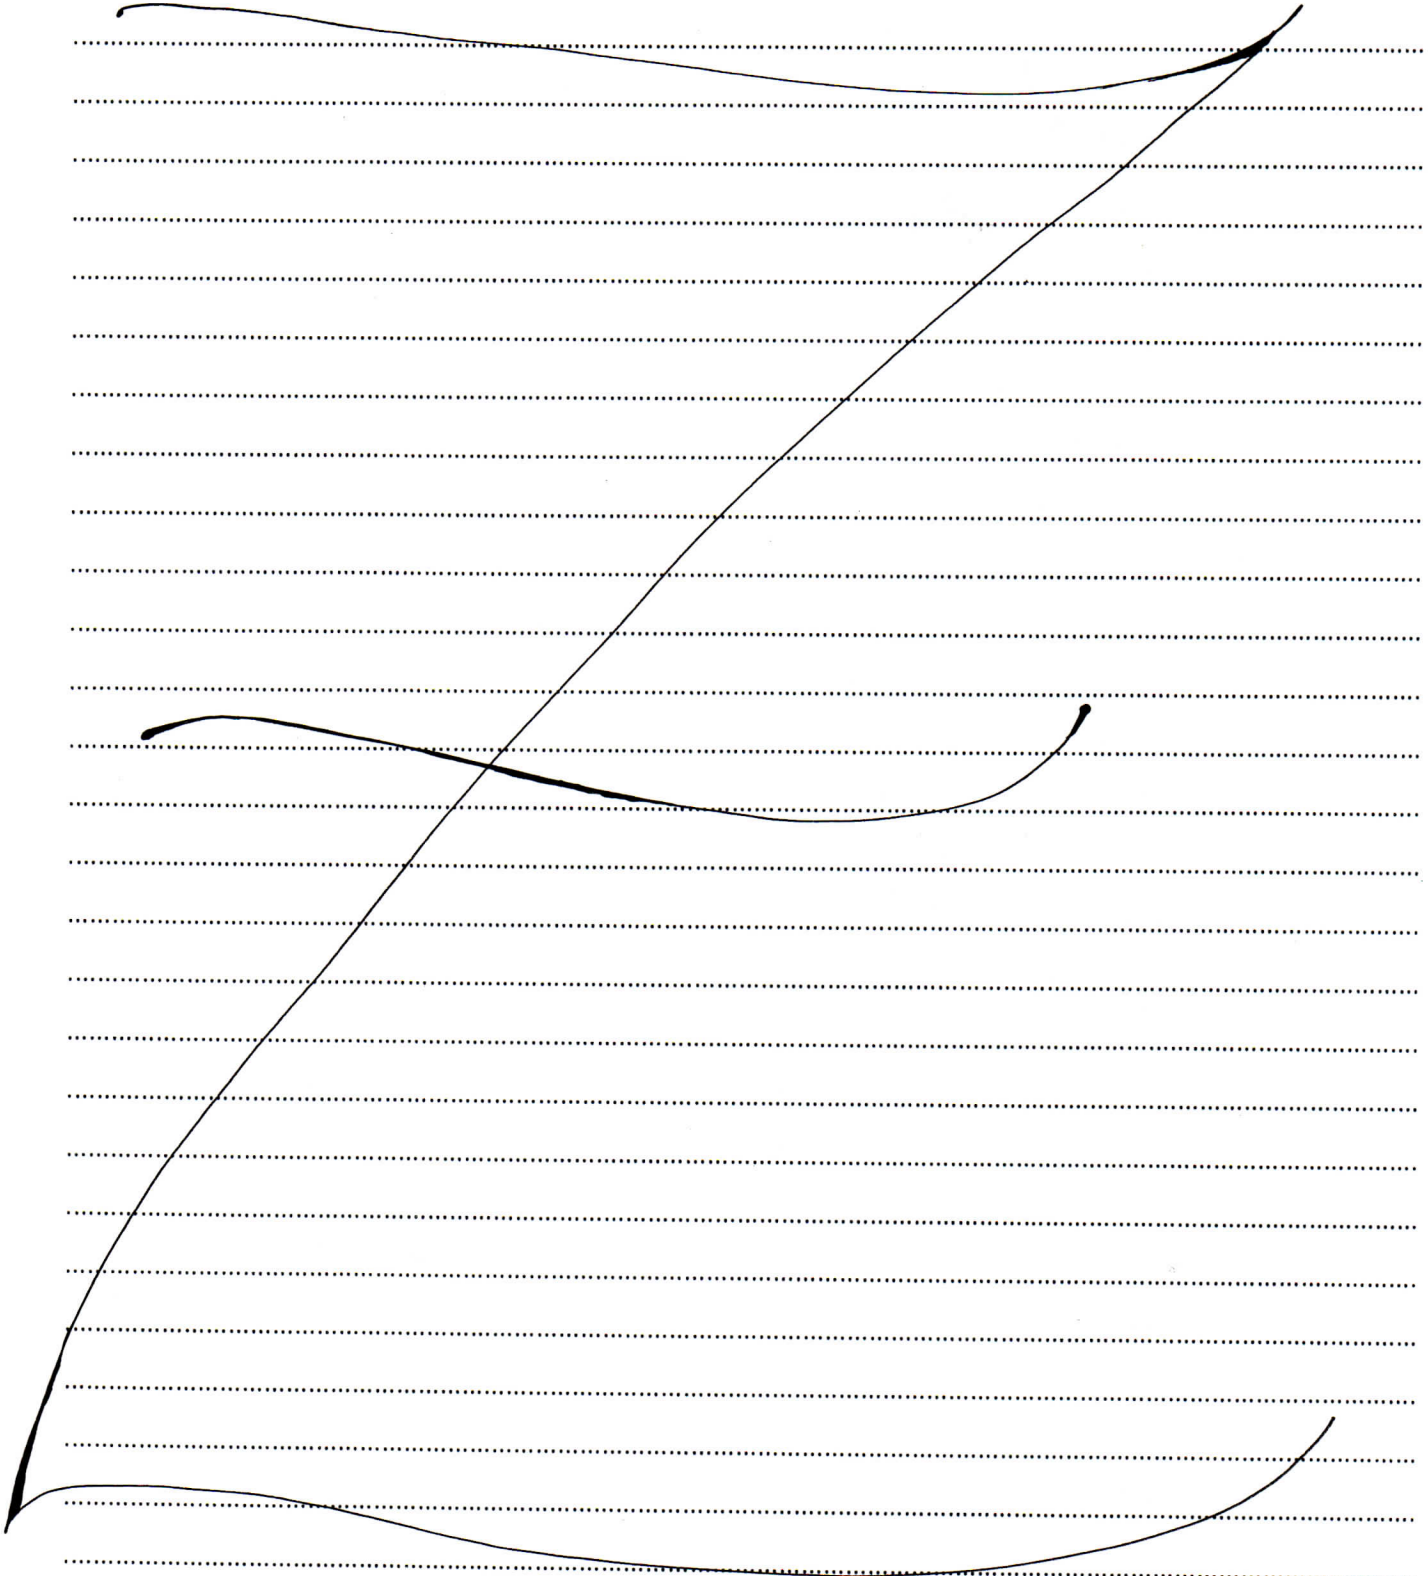

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt
