I was doing my homework when the door opened and my brother Adrian entered the room. He must've just finished working out as his skin was glistening with sweat.

"Amber, wanna go to the cinema?" He asked. I was pleased with his offer as I needed a distraction from my assignments. I noticed the sky was covered with gloomy clouds but agreed nevertheless.

As I descended the stairs, I heard mom arguing with Adrian. "Have you seen the weather? You shouldn't go outside!" Our hometown was notorious for its uncanny weather and poor roads. Every time it rained, there were terrific road accidents. Adrian, as always, didn't listen and left the house, leaving me with no option but to follow him to his car.

It was already raining, making the roads slippery. Suddenly, a deer appeared right in front of us, scuttling across the road. Adrian swerved the wheel, making the car veer and drive right into the tree. The speed wasn't high so the crash wasn't that horrible.

Neither of us said anything, too shocked by the events. After Adrian examined the car he said the damage wasn't terrible but he couldn't do anything with the car now, meaning we had to return home on foot. As we walked under the rain, I told Adrian off for not listening to mom. He kept silence, aware of being guilty.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
