It was a usual school day. Nobody expected anything extraordinary. My classmate Peter and I were sitting in the classroom, listening to our old professor Mr. Brown talking about the use of prepositions. I was doing my best to concentrate on what he was saying, but it was ~~too~~ way too hard for me. My friend, on the contrary, was so interested in the topic that when I whispered his name he didn't even pay attention. After the class I asked 'How could you be so focused during the boring lessons of English? I almost fell asleep!' He answered that not a long time ago a friend of his said that in a few days there ~~was~~ would be held a contest by an English-language club and the prize was expected to be terrific. So, as I understood, Peter firmly decided to get the prize. He added 'The last two days I was spending all my free time revising the rules. I think the prize is already mine!' I started recalling my evenings and realized the the only thing I was doing was working out in the gym. But the desire to be a winner made me join my friend and go to the contest. As the contest began everybody, ~~started~~ ~~writing~~ ~~the~~ ~~answers~~ except Peter and me, started ~~to~~ ~~filling~~ the writing the answers. Only we were sitting uncanny and confused, not knowing what to do. That day we realized that if you want to achieve something you should dedicate more than two days to the study. We got home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
