AN IMPORTANT LESSON

For no obvious reason I never got on well with my mom. And only watching some thoughtful reel could help me to relax. "Hedgehogs' life" seemed quite interesting. Suddenly a terrific idea struck my mind. I wanted to watch hedgehogs in nature.

I grabbed my brother and 20 minutes later we reached a forest. To our disappointment, we found no hedgehogs and decided just to enjoy the harmonious atmosphere. We climbed a tree to see everything from some height.

"Look there!" James suddenly pointed at something on the ground. Firstly, I could see nothing, but then I noticed a baby hedgehog.

Without waiting a second, I jumped from the tree, but awkwardly fell down.

"I'm okay," I rose from the ground with a twisted smile, "Let's worry about this small creature"

It seemed like it had lost its mother. The hedgehog ~~was~~ was so helpless and defenceless even with all its needles. God knows how much time we spent looking for the mother, but, finally, we managed to work it out.

Without a doubt, if hedgehogs could embrace each other, they would do it. Family was together. And at this moment I felt a strong desire to put myself right with mom. Pointless quarrels just made us forget about the main values. Family and mutual understanding.

It began to rain. James took my hand and we left the forest, scuttling from the uncanny weather.

"Do you think it's strange to try to understand your parents?" I asked then.

"It's strange not to try," that was the answer.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
