Frightened but Happy

It happened a month ago in the Crimea. My boyfriend Mark and I visited Mark's grandmother there. The place where her house was situated was one of the most beautiful places I had ever seen. Among the mountains, nearly 150 metres far from the sea shore it made me fall in love with its atmosphere.

Everything was amazing and two weeks passed at an uncanny speed. On our last day there Mark and I decided to watch the dawn high in the mountains. We shared our romantic plans with Mark's granny but she looked through the window and said "The sky is frightening today, the ^{terrific} red colours indicate that it's going to storm tomorrow. The idea doesn't seem brilliant."

Despite granny's awareness Mark woke me up at night and we decided that our plan would work out because there was no a cloud in the sky and the weather seemed to be fantastic.

An hour later we were already sitting on top of the high hill and admiring the breathtaking sunrise. That moment we felt happier than ever before. But suddenly everything changed. The sky immediately became gray and we understood that Mark's granny was totally right.

Scuttling from the top of the ~~high~~ hill we felt that the wind was becoming stronger and stronger and then it started pouring down. My head was reeling when I saw some trees falling down the hillside but Mark cried "Nothing happens to us when we are together" and that made me feel relieved.

We got back home in one piece: cold, drenched, but having learnt an important lesson.
